Henry L. Frisbie
(1835-1920)

Henry Leonard Frisbie (1835-1920) was born in Branford, Connecticut. The family moved West to Iroquois County, Illinois, when he was 12 and, during the Civil War, he served in the 113th Regiment Illinois Volunteers. His first and most famous song was "Oh, Bury the Brave Where They Fall" published by Root & Cady in 1863. His name is sometimes spelled "Henrie." He settled in Onarga, Illinois, and, for a time was in the lumber and coal and farm implement business. His family was active in the Congregationalist Church. He died in Onarga. He authored many hymns and wrote poems for family.

There's a country famed in story,
As you've oftentimes been told;
'Tis a land of mighty rivers,
Running over sands of gold:
The abode of peace and plenty,
And with quietness 'tis blest!
But this country that's so famous
Is away off in the west.

*'Tis away off in the west,
'Tis away off in the west;
O! I fear we ne'er shall find it,
'Tis so far off in the west.*

Once a man in Androscoggin,
Or in some outlandish place,
With a view to find this country,
To the westward set his face.
He was weary at Chicago,
So he sat him down to rest;
But 'twas only there the center,
Not the fabled golden west.

Then he crossed the rolling prairies
Stretching onward like the sea;
"I am bound to find this country,
If there's such a one," said he:
So he swam the Mississippi,
Then upon Missouri's breast,
He explored the wilds of Kansas
For this country in the west.

Climbing o'er the Rocky mountains,
On he kept his weary way,
Till the broad Pacific's waters
Right before his vision lay:
Here he sat him down and pondered,
But for him there was no rest;
" 'Tis an island, surely," said he,
"This fair country in the west."

So a vessel quick he builded,
And the shore he left behind;
Sailing on with eager longings,
Still this happy isle to find:
After many days, one morning
He beheld the wished for land;
Steering 'mid the shoals and breakers,
Quickly reached the golden strand.

From this gallant bark he landed,
Wading thro' the curling foam,
With his eyes wide ope' with wonder,
For he found himself at home:
Then he learned that one forever
Might go one and never rest;
Still they would not find this country,
For 'tis always further west.
